Steam workshop.Sen. Tim Kaine, D-Va., questioned Attorney General William Barr's credibility last month during a Senate hearing on the Department of Justice budget, saying he had been "stonewalled" and had "lied" about the inquiry into the origins of the FBI's investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 election. Barr, who has long maintained that FBI employees "sinned" by improperly disclosing information related to the Russia probe, sparred with Sen. Amy Klobuchar, D-Minn., at the hearing last month, arguing that the "concept of willful ignorance" was not an appropriate response to the request from congressional committees. "Willful ignorance is not a model for a Department of Justice. It's a model for a network news division," said Barr, who is also a former attorney general. "My first reaction was that I thought he was not telling the truth," said Kaine during an interview with "Pod Save America," a program on the streaming service Pivot TV, later confirmed by a spokesman for Kaine. A Kaine spokesman did not immediately respond to a question from the Washington Examiner whether he stood by that statement. In February, Kaine raised questions about Barr's credibility when he expressed doubt in a letter to Barr over the attorney general's interpretation of a surveillance law to justify the release of a memo that detailed the FBI's use of the law on warrants to surveil members of the Trump campaign. "Because you have failed to provide either a legal rationale or any factual basis for your interpretation of FISA, you have failed
